Going into Syria 'an inherent risk'

Avoiding air defences poses a concern

Military planners are preoccupied by issues such as how to avoid missile batteries and navigate Syria's defensive radar system, as Parliament debates the merits of expanding and extending Canada's Middle East mission.

The debate among MPs has revolved around the need for a broader military mission in Iraq and the legality of extending air strikes to include that country's troubled neighbour. Scant attention has been paid to the nature of what pilots are being asked to do and the risks they'll face.

Extremists in Syria won't have much in the way of air defences, other than shoulder-launched missiles that are mostly useless against high-flying jets.

But the mission — bombing targets belonging to the militant group Islamic State of Iraq and the Levant — is unprecedented in the sense that Canadian jets are being deployed with no effort to suppress or destroy potential anti-aircraft threats, defence experts say.

The opening shots of allied air forces in Libya, Kosovo, and Iraq during the first Gulf War, were always directed at taking down the enemy's air defence network, which in Syria consists of at least 131 active Russian-made surface-to-air missile sites.

Destroying that network is not part of the mission.

high level of trust that no one in that country's military has an itchy trigger finger. It will also necessitate clear rules of engagement for pilots that'll likely include taking out missile batteries that lock on to them with radar.

Defence Minister Jason Kenney has noted that no coalition jets have been fired upon by the Syrians, and says he has a high level of confidence in the U.S. commanders running the war.

Kenney said hundreds of sorties have already been flown over eastern Syria "with no risk to our allies." There's a reason for that, one defence expert said.

"I think they've made it clear through third-party interlocutors that if the Syrian air defence radar lights up, they'll take it out," said retired colonel George Petrolekas of the Conference of Defence Associations.

Kenney told CTV there's "an inherent risk" in any military operation.

Campaign to focus on safer roads for those on two wheels

Haley Ritchie
Metro | Ottawa

It's spring in Ottawa and despite the gloomy forecast, soon the snow will melt, the flowers will bloom and the city's cyclists and motorists will once again be road raging at each other.

This year, the city hopes to change that relationship with new programs to promote safety and empathy between drivers and cyclists.

"We want to get rid of this whole car-versus-cycling mentality," said Rob Wilkinson, who works with the city's Safer Roads program.

"Instead, we want people to know who that cyclist is. They're not just a cyclist, they're a doctor who rides a bike or a firefighter who rides a bike."

Another main focus this year will be cyclists and heavy trucks. The campaign was developed in response to two high-profile collisions last year that ended in fatalities.

Other programs being planned include workshops to teach new immigrants about bike laws in Canada, free bike-light giveaways and nine new bike repair stations to open before the end of the summer.

The city will be working closely with emergency services, public health and community groups to administer the new programs.

"If we're going to make our roads safer, it takes everyone's input," said Wilkinson. "In a lot of cases with accidents there's a shared responsibility. So our goal with the program is we want to reduce collisions and injuries to zero."

Not surprisingly, collisions begin to rise in March and April and continue to increase through the summer, according to data from the city.

Ottawa averages about 300 collisions a year, according to Wilkinson, but despite the danger, cyclists are eager to get back in the seat.

"We're really excited. Festival season is a great time for cycling, since it's really the easiest way to get to and from summer events in the city," said Gareth Davies, a spokesman for Ottawa-based Citizens for Safe Cycling.

The biggest concern is really just drivers not being used to seeing so many cyclists out.

Gareth Davis, of Citizens for Safe Cycling

+ BACKGROUND

Safety essentials

1. Wear a helmet. Technically it's optional if you're over the age of 18, but if you want to survive a collision it's pretty important.
2. Cyclists must have a bell or horn on their bike, according to the Highway Traffic Act. Use it when passing pedestrians or other cyclists.
3. It's also against the law not to have a light or reflector strips for your bike, either on the front or back.
4. Be predictable. "Don't surprise people with movements. If you're making a turn, signal your intent whether you are a cyclist or a driver," says Rob Wilkinson, of the Safer Roads program.

5. Obey traffic laws. As vehicles on the road, cyclists are required to wait at red lights and make full stops at stop signs. HALEY RITCHIE/METRO

Mayor returns to work

The mayor is expected to be back on the job Monday.

The city issued a release to say Jim Watson is ready to come back to city hall and start by working half-days only.

Watson fractured his pelvis while snowmobiling on Feb. 27 — a painful injury that limited his public engagements.

The accident happened moments after the mayor, Coun. Mathieu Fleury and Coun. Michael Qaqish were about to try out a trail after receiving training on snowmobiles at the Osgoode Carleton Snowmobile Trail Club.

The mayor had taken his snowmobile out for a spin and was coming back toward a cabin when he lost control of the vehicle and then fell to the ground, according to Fleury, councillor for Rideau-Vanier.

Future Shop's end brings change to retail landscape

Stores closed abruptly, leaving 1,500 out of jobs

Irene Ekweozoh spent about an hour driving to Future Shops in Gatineau and Ottawa on Saturday afternoon trying to buy a microphone for her daughter's piano as a birthday gift, but had no clue all of the company's stores nationwide had been abruptly closed.

"I was so surprised to see that they were closed. I thought maybe it was for renovations or something," she said the following day outside the Best Buy on Merivale Road.

The Future Shop right next door had its doors covered in signs informing customers the store is permanently closed and directing them to the Best Buy, which now owns Future Shop.

In a news release, Best Buy said it will close 66 stores immediately and another 65 stores will be closed for a week to be transformed into Best Buy stores.

New app simplifies travel for commuters

Trevor Greenway
Metro | Ottawa

Transit users in Ottawa will soon be able to check real-time bus locations with just the flick of a wrist.

A transit app for the new Apple Watch is hitting the streets April 24. It aims to give riders accurate arrival times so they know if they have time to blow dry their hair or change that coffee-stained shirt.

"When we were designing the watch app, we asked ourselves how can we make public transit just a little bit more convenient," said Jake Sion, Strategy and Development officer with Transit App.

"It's most important to be able to check when your ride will get here, so with just a couple taps on the watch, you will see the next three departure times for your preferred route. People don't need to wait outside in the cold and feel frustrated about not knowing if or when their bus is going to arrive."

with the app, as the company has tens of thousands of users for its real-time iPhone/Android app, but Sion says the watch will make things even more efficient.

"Someone may say, 'Well, how hard is it to take out your phone to check departure times?' But, especially in transit when those seconds matter most, it's always about making things a little bit more convenient, which makes a big difference."

The app also has a "take me home" feature that will map out an A-to-B route with a simple tap. Users will have their address stored in the watch and will just tap the button for directions home.

"You won't have to fumble on the streets with your phone to find out how to get home," explained Sion.

MUSIC

Bluesfest headliner to be named Monday

The lineup for Ottawa Bluesfest is set to get better, as organizers are announcing a "major addition to their lineup" Monday morning.

The crew at Ottawa's premiere music festival was tight-lipped about the identity of the addition, only offering up a cryptic video on its website of executive director Mark Monahan running down an Ottawa trail.

"We had a leak at Bluesfest," Monahan says, out of breath in the video.

"But they didn't get the biggest name coming to RBC Bluesfest this year."

Monahan then tells fans to check the website at 10 a.m. Monday to discover the identity of the big headliner.

Bluesfest already announced some of its lineup for the July 9 to 19 summer festival, with the likes of Iggy Azalea, Keith Urban, Skrillex and Nas filling the bill.

NHL

Sens fans stay optimistic despite team's recent slump

The Ottawa Senators were the hottest team in the NHL during a late-season surge but have now suddenly lost three straight games.

That is bad news in a tight playoff race, but Sens fans at one popular watering hole on Sunday night aren't giving up hope yet.

"It happens; it's hockey," said Senators fan Scott Azulay at Real Sports Bar and Grill, where he watched the game.

"I don't know if you would call it a slump."

The 4-2 loss to the Florida Panthers means that the Sens have only earned one point out of a possible six in their last three games.

Andrew Hammond, the goalie whose unprecedented run has been credited for the Sens' success, was injured during his first regulation loss on Thursday against the New York Rangers.

Craig Anderson has started as goalie in both games since, but he is injured too.

Azulay said that his "fingers are crossed" Ottawa can still pull it off and make it into the playoffs ahead of the Boston Bruins and Panthers.

"Every team has its ups

"I still think they'll make it. They're going to put the best team to win out on the ice every night."

Senators fan Etienne Archambault

and downs," he said. "I think they've built up some confidence now."

Even if the Senators don't make it to the playoffs, there is no denying that Ottawa has been swept up by the excitement of the late-season surge.

Between the rain of hamburgers tossed as tribute to the Hamburglar, Hammond's nickname, and the controversy surrounding city council's early attempt to put up the Sens Mile signs on Elgin Street, a practice usually reserved for the playoffs, the team is the talk of the town.

Judith Carriere also watched Sunday's game at Real Sports Bar and Grill with her friends. While they are all casual Senators fans, they have paid closer attention to the team since its run began.

"Since the Hamburglar came along, we have been watching way more," said Carriere. "We're really hoping they are still going to make it to the playoffs. That's why we're here." NICHOLAS HODGE/FOR METRO

Baird joins mining firm as an adviser

Former federal foreign-affairs minister John Baird has become a special international adviser to Barrick Gold Corp.

The Toronto-based mining giant, in its annual report that was issued Friday, lists Baird as a member of the company's international advisory board.

Independent art supply store closing half its locations

Haley Ritchie
Metro | Ottawa

Ottawa's historic independent art supply store Wallack's has decided to shut down half of its six locations, including stores in Orleans, Gatineau and Hull.

"Sales were low, we weren't effectively running it and inventory was low, which made this difficult for us and difficult for our customers. To fix that priority problem, we had to make adjustments to bring stock back into just a couple locations," said Michael Wallack, the vice-president of the 75-year-old company.

Michael Wallack, the vice-president of the 75-year-old company.

The remaining three Wallack's stores located in Nepean, Centretown and Kingston will remain open, along with the downtown art gallery.

Most of the full-time staff were retained.

Wallack said it was a struggle to maintain inventory at the other locations and there wasn't a lot of interest in running the two Quebec stores after the managing partner passed away.

Like other independent stores, Wallack's has faced mounting pressure from larger craft chains like DeSerres, Michaels and even Dollarama.

"The pressure that we have from the big box stores and online is really changing the game. We're working on catching up," said Wallack, adding that local support has been essential in keeping the business going.

"There's a lot of people who want to support local and they do. They went to school buying our art supplies, they started their career with Wallack's products. A lot of people have an emotional attachment."

Wallack said inventory levels will return to normal at the three locations in April, when the store plans to launch its revamped e-commerce website.

Tale of two store robberies

Ottawa police have had their hands full with armed convenience store robberies.

On Thursday, police arrested a 17-year-old boy for allegedly robbing a Stittsville shop in January and are now seeking a suspect in a separate robbery in Barrhaven.

Police said the 17-year-old walked into a store along the 800 block of Meadowlands Drive on Jan. 15 with a knife. He demanded money, but when the employee refused, the suspect fled without any cash, police said. There were no injuries.

Sunshine List sheds a light on civil servants earning 6 figures

WAGES

Ottawa Police Chief earned more than 300K last year

Lucy Scholey
Metro | Ottawa

The City of Ottawa's top bureaucrat and the chief of police earned sizeable salary hikes last year, while the mayor's base rate stayed the same.

That's according to the 2014 Ontario "Sunshine List" — the annual report that reveals the province's civil servants with six-figure salaries.

Both City Manager Kent Kirkpatrick and Ottawa Police Chief Charles Bordeleau comfortably remain in that $100,000-plus club.

Kirkpatrick earned $341,273.58 last year, compared to $328,284 the previous year.

Bordeleau pulled in $274,475.20 — about a $20,000 pay hike from 2013.

Working on a 2010 campaign promise to freeze his salary last term, Ottawa Mayor Jim Watson's base earnings remained at $168,102.

Meanwhile, the medical chief at the Children's Hospital of Eastern Ontario, Elaine Leung, earned $375,620.96. The centre has announced it will cut 40 to 50 nurses due to budget shortfalls.

IN BRIEF

Taxpayers federation says province should freeze wages

Christine Van Geyn, the Ontario director of the Canadian Taxpayers Federation, said the government needs to clearly state, in contract negotiations, that it can't afford wage increases.

"When you are in the public sector, you are supposed to be making a trade-off between the high wages that the private sector is supposed to offer in exchange for job security and benefits," she said. "It looks like that trade-off doesn't exist anymore."

Conservative MPP Lisa MacLeod (Nepean-Carleton) pointed out that despite government claims of across-the-board wage freezes, the Sunshine List keeps rising.

"I've been saying for years that the way the government is handling Ontario's finances is unsustainable," said MacLeod, who made $125,174.

Her fellow Queen's Park MPPs earn a base salary of $116,550, while cabinet ministers make $165,851.

Kanata company launches Star Wars game

Lightsabers, Darth Vader figurines and Storm Trooper paraphernalia are all piled on the computer desks of a Kanata tech company.

Gigataur may be the dream workplace of any Star Wars kid from the 1970s to 1990s, but the employees are bringing the George Lucas franchise to the fingertips of today's generation.

The tech company scored a deal with Disney to create the new Star Wars Rebels: Recon-

AT A GLANCE

You can join the rebellion by downloading the game at Apple, Google and Windows app stores.

Missions game for iOS, Android and Windows devices.

"Kids these days, they know the iconography. They've seen this before," said Gigataur CEO Andrew Fisher, picking up a storm troopers helmet. "They've seen it, but they may not know who it is."

The video game is set about five years before Luke Skywalker meets Obi-Wan Kenobi on the planet Tatooine. Players guide Ezra Bridger through 35 levels as he battles with the Imperial Forces.

Star Wars purists can expect to see C3PO and R2D2 among the cameos from the original. In fact, the game's story line eventually builds up to "A New Hope," the fourth movie.

The game is geared toward nine- to 12-year-olds — and the first four levels are free, but it's also meant to entice parents who grew up with Chewbacca and Han Solo.

This time, building Star Wars fans involves more than newspaper and TV ads, said Fisher.

"All eyeballs are shifting to mobile," he said.

When Fisher was 11 years old, he camped outside a theatre in the rain to see Star Wars: The Empire Strikes Back.

"We might (camp out) for the new one because my kids are getting to that age where they can do that," he said.

His 11-year-old self never dreamed he would end up creating a video game version of the movie.

Filipina worker prays for reprieve

ALBERTA

Some TFWs might get more time in Canada, some might not

Lucy Haines
For Metro | Edmonton

As many Canadians will celebrate April 1 with jokes and pranks, 27-year-old Allen Osoreo will instead find out her fate, when her temporary work permit in Canada expires and the federal government decides whether to offer her a reprieve or deport her to the Philippines.

Alberta, a province whose energy-sector boom created huge demand for workers in the service industry, is home to a particularly large number of temporary foreign workers (TFWs), about 16,000 of whom face Osoreo's dilemma.

They've been here for more than four years and thus are now subject to a new federal law that says they must either be on the path to becoming permanent residents or prepare to head home as of Tuesday.

Just days before the deadline, Osoreo — who has been here only two years, but said her work contract is expiring — said she doesn't know what is about to happen.

"I came here for my family and never expected the law would change," Osoreo said. "I have hope and faith that the government will let me stay. But I think this will be my last chance."

About two years ago, Osoreo left her daughter, then five, and ailing parents behind in the Philippines to move to Edmonton.

She came for a job at a McDonald's through the Temporary Foreign Workers Program, and before she left, she promised her father she'd support the family financially, whatever happened.

After a few months, Osoreo's father died. Her family has depended on the money she sends home from her job since then.

Osoreo works full-time day shifts at a McDonald's in St. Albert, taking the bus to and from the 124 Street-area apartment she shares with a cousin.

"I just got off evenings, and had to take a cab then, so this is better," she said. "We're all here to work and not to complain about the shifts we get. God has a plan for everything, and I haven't been home in nearly three years. So we'll see."

Osoreo may get the reprieve she's praying for. Some temporary workers in Alberta are reportedly receiving an extension while they wait for their permanent resident applications to be processed.

But just who qualifies and who doesn't remains unclear.

The Alberta Federation of Labour and Canadian Federation of Independent Business have both advocated for an easier path to permanent residency and eventual citizenship for temporary workers, especially in Alberta where worker shortages have created a crisis for the businesses who cannot find other workers to fill jobs.

Adrienne Hill of Alberta's department of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour said temporary workers are entitled to stay in Canada until their work permit expires or is renewed. Once the permit expires, the worker no longer has their job, she explained.

Osoreo said she's not ready to acknowledge she may have to leave Canada if an extension isn't permitted.

"My employer wants us to stay, and I want to stay in my father's memory. I made that promise."

CIVIL RIGHTS

Ottawa's eyes were on these protests

What do Canadian veterans, advocates for the disabled, and the country's largest union have in common? Their activities were monitored and reported on by police and government agencies over the last year.

Documents show the central Government Operations Centre received reports on more than 160 protests, community events, and demonstrations between May 2014 and February 2015. The RCMP, Public Safety Canada, and the Privy Council Office prepared reports for the GOC — which co-ordinates the federal government's response to national emergencies and natural disasters.

While much of the monitoring focused on First Nations causes and environmental activism, the GOC showed a diverse set of interests, including:

- A rally on Parliament Hill pushing for better benefits for Canadian veterans.
- A "die-in" protesting police brutality against black Americans, including vigils for Ferguson, Mo., shooting victim Michael Brown organized by the Black Lives Matter movement.
- An event called Paddle for Peace in Fort St. Jean, B.C., where the report noted "public order issues are not expected."
- Canadian Doctors for Refugee Care's national day of action.
- An "interfaith peace demonstration" in Mississauga.
- The RCMP also reported on the Occupy movement in B.C.'s efforts to reach out to like-minded groups to "face the Industrial Hydra."

The documents show police and government agencies have been active on Facebook, reporting on protest plans organized through social media. One report to the centre dealt with a potential "cyber protest" aimed at the oil and gas industry.

The GOC was established by the former Liberal government in 2004. It was meant to provide 24/7 monitoring and "situational awareness" to government departments about potential or actual hazards on a national scale.

But Wayne Easter, a former solicitor general and the Liberal MP who obtained the documents, said the agency seems to have strayed from its original mandate.

"They're supposed to be there in terms of co-ordinating operations for the safety and security of Canadians and the need for an initial response to, whether it's a natural disaster or a man-made disaster, in the most effective and efficient way possible," Easter said Tuesday. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Flight delays, cancellations after plane slid from runway

Haley Ryan
Metro | Halifax

Investigators spent the day at Halifax Stanfield International Airport combing through a badly damaged Air Canada jet that slid more than 340 metres along the runway after a 'hard landing' in a heavy snowstorm.

But, barely 12 hours after the crash, travellers at Stanfield International were dozing in the departures lounge and only a few delays were showing on the arrival and departures boards.

By Sunday afternoon, a handful of people lying on blue mats around the departures gate and delays flashing on screens were the only signs anything had gone amiss.

An Air Canada jet coming from Toronto made a hard landing at the Halifax Stanfield International Airport around 12:30 a.m., and the damaged plane sat on the tarmac all day Sunday after a second runway was opened.

"Incidents happen. To me it wasn't really an accident, it's an incident ... so it doesn't deter me from flying," said Annette Ford as she waited to board a plane Sunday afternoon that was supposed to leave at 7 a.m.

Halifax International Airport Authority spokesman Peter Spurway said things were running slower than usual on Sunday afternoon, but steadily improving. Power at the airport had gone out soon after the plane landed, taking down the baggage and screening systems, which had to be done manually for a few hours.

"We'll have to make sure

that the runway is completely all set before we can put it back in service," Spurway said.

As he waited for his delayed flight to Alberta, Jerome Almon of Cape Breton said there "was a lot of chaos" when he joined the lines of hundreds of people waiting to check baggage Sunday morning, but by 1 p.m.

everything had calmed.

Some slept on blue mats along the benches, while others said they were offered vouchers for food and drink to make up for the unexpected delay.

The city was under a snowfall warning during the landing, and flyer Samantha Compton said it would be a good idea to review regulations in case anything could be improved.

"Flying into Canada, this is what sometimes happens, and (it's) unlucky, but everyone deals with the situation the best they can," said Compton, who arrived in Halifax after her flight in was delayed in Montreal.

NEW BRUNSWICK

Atlantic region sees decline in birth rates

Coles Island School in New Brunswick has taught children for 58 years but this may be its last.

Enrolment has dwindled to a point where the school now teaches 30 students from kindergarten to Grade 5. The area's district education council voted this month to close the school.

The school's closure is just one way the province's demographic shift manifests itself. Here's another: Statistics Canada reported this month that more people died than were born in New Brunwick last year for the first time since it began tracking such figures. Two other provinces — Nova Scotia and Newfoundland and Labrador being the others — have also recorded more deaths than births in recent years.

Academics and politicians have warned about Canada's aging population and what it will mean for the country's social services and its rural communities. Nowhere is that impact more acutely felt than in Atlantic Canada.

Police watchdog probes man's death

Ontario's police watchdog is investigating the death of a 58-year-old man after a standoff in a Peterborough parking lot that forced a lockdown at a Walmart on Saturday.

The Special Investigations Unit says Peterborough city police were contacted about a man with a firearm.

An SIU statement says officers located the man in his vehicle in the store's parking lot and tried to communicate with him.

The agency says a gunshot was heard from the man's vehicle and police found the man dead. A post-mortem has been scheduled for Monday morning in Toronto.

Local media outlets reported there were several hundred of people in the store at the time.

Peterborough paramedics were called to provide assistance to any customers at the supermarket who required medical attention, but no injuries among the customers were reported.

FRANCE ELECTIONS

Socialists lose to mainstream right

Former President Nicolas Sarkozy blasted the “lies, denial and impotence” of France’s governing Socialists after estimates showed his conservative party and their allies chalked up wins across France in Sunday’s local elections that saw the left lose half of its councils. The far-right National Front edged forward in its bid to create an army of grassroots support.

Socialist Prime Minister Manuel Valls conceded that the mainstream right won the voting.

“It is incontestable,” Valls said, bemoaning divisions within the left that he said proved costly.

Polling firms estimated that Sarkozy’s conservative UMP and centrist allies won 66 to 70 of the 98 local councils, while President Francois Hollande’s divided Socialist Party — which held the majority of local councils before the elections — took up to 35 but potentially losing half of those it held before the elections. Last week’s first round pointed to a win of the mainstream right.

Sarkozy, in a victory statement, said the right would prepare a changing of the guard “to redress the country, stop the decline that the most archaic socialism in Europe has plunged it into.”

Estimates suggested the anti-immigration National Front could win up to two councils with scores that Valls said were “clearly in progression.”

The political stakes were high despite the local vote as Hollande’s left tried to save itself after failing to boost the lagging French economy or increase jobs and Sarkozy’s right eyed a comeback, and each side tried to fend off the anti-immigration National Front which comes off a series of electoral victories.

Military strikes to continue: Leaders

A two-day Arab summit ended Sunday with a vow to defeat Iranian-backed Shiite rebels in Yemen and the formal unveiling of plans to form a joint Arab intervention force, setting the stage for a potentially dangerous clash between U.S.-allied Arab states and Tehran over influence in the region.

Arab leaders taking turns to address the gathering spoke repeatedly of the threat posed to the region’s Arab identity by what they called moves by “foreign” or “outside parties” to stoke sectarian, ethnic or religious rivalries in Arab states — all thinly-veiled references to Iran, which has in recent years consolidated its hold in Iraq, Syria, Lebanon and now Yemen.

The summit’s final communique made similarly vague references, but the Arab League chief, Nabil Elaraby, was unequivocal during a news conference later, singling out Iran for what he said was its intervention “in many nations.”

A summit resolution said the newly unveiled joint Arab defence force would be deployed at the request of any Arab nation facing a national security threat and that it would also be used to combat terrorist groups.

The agreement came as U.S. and other Western diplomats were pushing to meet a Tuesday deadline to reach a deal with Iran that would restrict its nuclear program in exchange for the lifting of economic sanctions.

The pastor of the Lutheran church in Andreas Lubitz’s hometown said Sunday that the community stands by him and his family, despite the fact that prosecutors blame the 27-year-old co-pilot for causing the plane crash that killed 150 people in southern France.

The town of Montabaur has been rattled by the revelation that Lubitz, who first learned

The co-pilot, the family belong to our community, and we stand by this, and we embrace them and will not hide this, and want to support the family in particular.

Michael Dietrich, pastor of the Lutheran church in Andreas Lubitz’s hometown to fly at a nearby glider club, may have intentionally caused Tuesday’s crash of Germanwings Flight 9525.

“For us, it makes it particularly difficult that the only victim from Montabaur is suspected to have caused this tragedy, this crash — although this has not been finally confirmed, but a lot is indicating that — and we have to face this,” pastor Michael Dietrich said.

He spoke to The Associated Press after holding a church service Sunday to commemorate the crash victims and support their families.

“The co-pilot, the family belong to our community, and we stand by this, and we embrace them and will not hide this, and want to support the family in particular,” Dietrich said.

He added that there is no direct contact with the family at the moment, but that he believes they are receiving good assistance.

French prosecutors haven’t questioned the family yet “out of decency and respect for their pain,” Marseille prosecutor Brice Robin said.

Authorities are trying to understand what made Lubitz lock his fellow pilot out of the cockpit and ignore his pleas to open the door before slamming the plane into a mountain on what should have been a routine flight from Barcelona to Duesseldorf. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Crowdsourcing holds key

FIRST NATIONS

Thinkers challenged to find solution to health care

A long and dark list materializes when tabulating the health problems plaguing First Nations communities across Canada: HIV and AIDS, tuberculosis, nutritional deficits, alcohol and drug dependency, suicide.

Some innovative thinkers say they believe a brilliant solution could cost as little as $25,000.

An accounting firm and new tech outfit have paired to try to inspire problem-solvers from around the world to generate cost-effective ideas that might prove to be the magic elixir for the health-care challenges facing First Nations.

Calgary-based MNP LLP has adopted a strategy that's also being used by Google as it tries to send a robot to the moon — combining crowdsourcing and cash incentives to find solutions. "Everybody will say, 'Let's throw more money at this problem,'" said Clayton Norris, an executive with MNP. "But that's not what we're saying here."

The firm is putting up just $25,000 as first prize, and two smaller prizes of $5,000, for the best ideas that will be judged by a panel of health experts and its own representative. The challenge is dubbed Operation Blue Sky.

First Nations health advisers say the avant-garde use of crowdsourcing, referring to the process of soliciting a multitude of micro-ideas using the expansive reach of 21st century communications, is a first for aboriginal health care in Canada.

Finding an affordable way to address the many health problems faced by First Nations is a big ask, Norris admitted. But his firm was inspired to try something different, by the online platform that's hosting the challenge.

The company, called HeroX, is a for-profit spinoff of the XPrize Foundation, which is running Google's higher-stakes $30-million competition urging teams to design a cheap lunar robot by the end of 2016.

Norris said the competition stems from MNP's desire to give back to its clients — more than 150 First Nations across the country. The deadline for proposals is Aug. 12. Anyone can submit a solution, although the firm is encouraging entries from aboriginal Canadians who already have some experience providing community health care. MNP funds the prize, while also paying a small percentage to HeroX.

Target speeding up its exit from Canada

Target Corp. is planning to close all of its Canadian stores even faster than originally planned.

A court-appointed monitor overseeing the windup of the Target Canada stores says all 133 locations across the country will be permanently shut down by "as early as mid-April," which is about a month ahead of schedule.

Some locations have already ceased operations — 17 stores closed in the middle of March. Another six Target locations will shutter on Monday, while 23 are slated for closure on April 1, and 32 more on April 2.

A liquidation has been underway since last month, while lawyers are in court trying to iron out the details of Target's departure. A variety of creditors that include landlords, suppliers and others impacted by the closures, are trying to determine what will happen to money they're owed.

Future Shop's closure doesn't spell end of tech stores: Expert

The elimination of the Future Shop brand may be the end of an era for the once-successful Canadian retailer, but it does not foretell the end for stand-alone electronics stores, says one business expert.

Mark Satov says closing Future Shop was an "inevitable" move for Best Buy, the American company that bought the Canadian retailer in 2001.

"Best Buy is a big U.S. brand, so if they had to shutter one brand in Canada it would certainly be Future Shop," said Satov, a business adviser on customer strategy with Satov Consultants in Toronto.

Best Buy Canada announced on Saturday the closure of 66 Future Shop locations in Canada, with the remaining 65 to be rebranded as Best Buy.

Satov says while electronics are often purchased online, he predicts customers will continue to value stores on the ground.

"If you are retaining bricks-and-mortar it's going after a different segment, it's providing a different experience, making sure to have the expertise and other things in the store that you just can't get online," said Satov.

"Not everybody is going to go get that experience and feel right about then going online and buying it from somebody else." THE CANADIAN PRESS

What is the bigger vision for our post-secondary institutions?

More and more, our post-secondary institutions are behaving like private — rather than public — enterprises, and it's students who are propping them up.

The ones benefitting, however, are university bigwigs.

Their salaries are routinely grabbing headlines, like UBC president Stephen Toope's $536,196, making him the top paid among post-secondary employees in B.C. last year, according to media reports. University of Alberta president Indira Samarasekera was criticized for her $529,000 salary in 2013. And just last week, we learned Western University president Amit Chakma earned an incredible $924,000 last year. Relax, Western countered: It's really only a $440,000 salary. Chakma got a two-for-one last year because he was owed a paid year of leave. Yeah, right. Job perks are not an excuse — they're part of the problem. And close to half a million dollars is still too high.

Don't give me the bull that you need to attract talent. A prestigious job with the ability to create real change will attract excellent candidates. It does for many other Canadian schools for half the price.

So why the high salaries? David Macdonald, an economist at the Canadian Centre for Policy Alternatives, said universities are competing against the private sector, where RBC's CEO made $7.56 million last year, instead of the public sector, where Prime Minister Stephen Harper pulled in $327,400.

If university boards believe they need to think like the private sector, who am I to disagree? Besides, that strategy aligns with their revenue models, which depend less and less on government funding and more and more on private sources, mostly tuition fees. Tuition now covers 51 per cent of Ontario university budgets, according to the province's faculty associations. Nationally, according to 2009 stats, they represent 35 per cent of university budgets, up from about 14 per cent in 1989.

But, my question is: What is the bigger vision for our post-secondary institutions? And where is the end game?

Macdonald argues we're already beginning to look like the U.S. (where median compensation for university presidents in 2014 was $478,896, according to one newspaper analysis).

Meanwhile, students from the University of Saskatchewan were protesting high tuition fees last week, conjuring up a dream, some might say, of free post-secondary education.

Other wealthy countries such as Denmark and Germany offer that; it's an idea that's realistic, yet wildly unlikely here.

Too bad. True public higher education — paid for by all of us, available to all of us — is my kind of vision.

Only $100K? Sounds like plenty to me, Sunshine

COLLINS' CAPITAL

Steve Collins

The rites of spring in Ontario include the release of the Sunshine List — and accompanying assurances from public sector unions that $100,000 ain't what it used to be.

The Public Sector Salary Disclosure, established in 1996, lists public servants earning $100K and up, a threshold which, adjusted for inflation, would be more like $142,000 today.

As it stands, we're told, the roster of top-earning public servants also catches more and more regular folks just scraping by on six figures.

Well, OK. But to me and most people I know, a hundred grand is what it's always been: pretty much unattainable. The Canadian Centre for Policy Alternatives in response pointedly reminds us that half of Ontarians report an income of less than $35,000.

I'm not arguing that anybody on the Sunshine List isn't worth what they're paid, but if you consider $100,000 a working stiff's take-home, I'm suggesting you travel in reasonably fortunate circles and should think of giving generously to your nearest city columnist. Every little bit helps!

Despite any distortions of the financial picture this overly modest salary cap may create, the numbers tell interesting stories here at home — where 2,247 city employees made the Sunshine List in 2014. Measured by paycheck, the hierarchy of Ottawa's city government as you might imagine it undergoes a bit of a shuffle.

Mayor Jim Watson ($168,102) wears the chain of office, sits in the big chair and risks life and limb as our civic snowmobile stuntman, but our chief magistrate doesn't even crack the top 10 highest-paid city employees.

City Manager Kent Kirkpatrick ($341,273), Police Chief Charles Bordeleau ($274,475) and OC Transpo GM John Manconi ($234,552) are among 17 city workers who pull in more than the boss.

Speaking of OC Transpo, eight city bus operators made the $100,000-plus list in 2012. In 2014, that doubled to 16. I don't have a count of six-figure earners among their passengers, but suspect it has not doubled in the same period.

This is not necessarily excessive when you consider that transit riders entrust these drivers with their lives.

And ditto police, who always figure prominently on the Sunshine List. For 2014, 1,079 Ottawa Police Service employees made the cut.

In 2012, 113 rank-and-file constables broke the six-figure barrier. Last year, the total was 726. Explanations include top-ups from an arbitration settlement and overtime pay, but what it boils down to is that their numbers exploded on the list because more of them were paid more money.

In Toronto, where the policing bill is even higher, police union president Mike McCormack called the annual salary disclosure a "public shaming" that only stirs up resentment among the unwashed. He's another one arguing to push the pay threshold over $100,000.

It's a strange argument but sadly a common one: If we give the public information, they're only going to feel the wrong way about it or draw the wrong conclusions, so let's give them less of it.

Sure, some of us may grow envious, question the heft of some paycheques, or just enjoy a voyeuristic thrill from looking up people we know.

But how are these paycheques not the business of the people paying the salaries?

Get a grip on broolly behaviour on the bus

URBAN ETIQUETTE

How to keep umbrella use right as rain

Ellen Vanstone

Dear Ellen,

Winter is barely over, but I've already found myself about to sit down on the bus only to discover a wet seat caused by a previous passenger placing their umbrella on it. That, and I was almost stabbed by the person in front of me carrying their umbrella under their arm and stopping too quickly. What is the proper etiquette when it comes to commuting with umbrellas?

— Jeff in Vancouver

Dear Jeff,

It is never advisable to sit down on a wet seat on public transit, but at least in your case, we can assume the moisture is pure West Coast rainwater — not that it makes bad umbrella etiquette any less annoying.

Proper procedure with a drippy broolly is to shake it, shake like it's hot, then roll it up, strap it shut and hold it close to you like a cane, tip down toward the floor, while you sit or stand on the bus or train.

Chances are, a few stray drops may dampen your own leg, but if anyone's forced to soak up excess water from an umbrella, let it be the said umbrella's owner.

If you have a purse-size collapsible broolly, and you're OCD enough to have kept the little sleeve it came in, shake the umbrella, bundle it into the sleeve, or a plastic bag, and stuff it into your purse, knapsack or pocket.

As for the jabbing, not only is such behaviour the height of rudeness, it can also be fatal, as in the case of Bulgarian ex-pat Georgi Markov, who was jabbed in the calf by the tip of a passerby's broolly on London's Waterloo Bridge in 1978, and died three days later.

your propensity for sarcasm remains at moderately civil levels, you are likely safe from this kind of murderous umbrella attack.

Still, when jabbed, even unfatally, it is tempting to use your own umbrella as a retaliatory weapon, but it would

Admittedly, the umbrella that killed Markov contained the deadly poison ricin delivered in a micro-engineered pellet devised by KGB technology. It's also true that Markov was a particularly sarcastic critic of Iron Curtain Communism. So if you're not a target of Cold War spies and be very bad manners indeed to thrash a fellow commuter on public transit with your rolled-up umbrella — even if it's the very small, purse-sized model — no matter how much they deserve it.

A simple request is the way to go: "Excuse me, I wonder if you could lower your umbrella a touch?" (taking care not to add, sarcastically or otherwise, "and shove it where the sun don't shine").

PSYCHOLOGY

Humans designed to weather breakups

Humans are wired to break up and move on, according to a new study drawing on the field of evolutionary psychology.

"Our review of the literature suggests we have a mechanism in our brains designed by natural selection to pull us through a very tumultuous time in our lives," says Brian Boutwell, associate professor of criminology and criminal justice and associate professor of epidemiology at Saint Louis University in the U.S.

Dr. Boutwell focused on the process of breaking up (deemed primary mate ejection for the purposes of the study), and getting over it — which is called secondary mate ejection.

"It suggests people will recover; the pain will go away with time," he says of his research. "There will be a light at the end of the tunnel."

Men are more likely to end relationships if their partner has cheated on them, according to the study, indicating that for evolutionary purposes, men are hard-wired to avoid raising children of whom they are not the biological father.

Women are likely to end relationships if their partner is emotionally unfaithful and this also has evolved for practical reasons, according to the study, which was published in the journal Review of General Psychology.

Mate ejection by females has evolved as a way to avoid the loss of resources, such as physical protection, that their mates provide, says Dr. Boutwell.

Yet men and women have reasons in common for ending a relationship, according to Dr. Boutwell, whose research suggests neither tolerates cruelty.

Research into lost love is important, says Dr. Boutwell, in developing a better understanding of why relationships fail.

"If we better understand mate ejection, it may offer direct and actionable insight into ways in which couples can save a relationship," he says. AFP

Know the real cost of your car

FINANCING

Beware of hidden driving expenses and too-long loans

Gail Vaz-Oxlade
gailvazoxlade.com

I'm standing in front of a money moron pointing out that he's spending way too much on his vehicle. His response: "It's only $350 biweekly." Lord love a duck! The dude is taking home about $4,000 a month and thinks that spending $700 a month on a vehicle payment is OK.

"So you're OK spending more than a quarter of your income on your car?" I ask, my eyes almost popping out of my head in disbelief. (You've seen my eyes do that, right?)

"What do you mean?" he asks, since by his calculation, he's nowhere near the 25 per cent mark.

"Add in your insurance, your maintenance, your gas," I say, stabbing at the paperwork in front of us, "it comes up to $1,100 a month. That's 27 per cent of your income."

He looks stunned. He had never added it up.

Of course he hadn't. He'd seen that $350 biweekly payment and felt really good about working that into his non-existent budget. And he never thought of the payment in the context of his income. He'd seen a payment of $350 and thought, "I can have this great car for $350!"

The biweekly or weekly payment is the latest trend in payment positioning in the car biz. You can make just about any payment amount palatable if you break it down enough. The salesman looks at you, a twinkle in his eye, and says, "If you take the loan for 84 months, you can have that beautiful vehicle for just $125 a week."

Zoom! Zoom! You can do $125 a week, right? C'mon, it's just $125 a week to drive this beauty! Back to my money moron.

"I have more bad news for you, buddy. Have you added up what this vehicle is going to cost you by the time you've paid it off?"

"No," he says sheepishly. Why would he do that? He doesn't want to know what the interest is going to add to the cost of the vehicle? He just needs to know how small he can make the payment.

You can make just about any payment amount palatable if you break it down enough.

"OK," I say, "that's the next step." I give him a calculator and say, "Multiply the $45,000 you dropped on this baby by the six per cent you're paying on your loan. Then divide by 12 to get the monthly interest. What do you get?"

He pushes the buttons on the calculator and comes up smiling. "$225," he says, confident that he's done it right.

"How long is the loan?"

"72 months," says he.

"Since the interest is calculated on a declining balance, we're going to use 68 months for this calculation. Multiply $225 by 70 months."

He pushes more buttons and says, "$15,750."

"So you'll have paid over $60,000 for that $45,000 car!"

He's surprised. He'd never thought about adding the financing cost into the purchase price to see what the car was actually going to cost.

Now that we have, he has the decency to look chagrined.

"Assuming, of course, you drive that puppy for six years."

Car salespeople have another nifty trick up their sleeves when it comes to making you feel better about being a money moron.

If you run out of car before you run out of payment they're happy to roll what you owe to the new vehicle they're selling you. They call what you still owe "negative equity."

Don't be fooled by the word "equity." You don't have any, thus the word "negative." Translated into English, "negative equity" equals "debt."

So now that you've taken a too-long loan, and the loan has outlasted the vehicle, why don't you take some of that debt you haven't yet paid off and wrap it around your new car loan, driving up the new car cost even further?

Why not? C'mon, it'll get you into a snappy new vehicle for just $125 a week if you take the loan for eight years. It's a deal!

Buying a vehicle is a big expense. If you extend the loan payments past 48 months, you're buying more vehicle than you can afford.

Don't fool yourself by going for one of those massively long loan periods. You're deluding yourself and you'll end up paying way more than the vehicle is worth.

If you haven't added the loan cost to the cost of the vehicle so you know what that sweet ride will end up costing you, you're being an ostrich.

"Get rid of the car," I say, "you can't afford it."

His mate looks over at me triumphant. She told him not to buy that car, but he'd gone ahead and done it anyway. Money morons aren't particularly good listeners!

COMPREHENSIVE PROGRAM TAUGHT BY LAWYERS

Doctors have duty to warn: Experts

MENTAL HEALTH

A look at the responsibilities of a person who fears risk to the public

Emerging evidence in the investigation into Germanwings co-pilot Andreas Lubitz is raising suspicions he may have suffered from mental health problems which he hid from his employer.

And that, in turn, is raising questions of whether a mental health professional has a duty to warn authorities if he or she thinks a patient is likely to be a threat to others — in the workplace or elsewhere.

The short answer to that question is yes.

Let's take a look at this issue:

What is the evidence that suggests Lubitz had mental health problems?

It's early in the investigation, and information could change. But German media are reporting the co-pilot had been treated for depression. And The New York Times is reporting that among Lubitz's papers were several doctors' notes stating he was too ill to work, including one for the day he seems to have deliberately crashed the plane he was co-piloting.

If Lubitz was under the care of a mental health professional, was that person duty-bound to warn authorities if it appeared Lubitz posed a risk to his airline's passengers?

Psychiatrists, like other medical professionals, are bound by laws of confidentiality. They must keep private the information they learn from their patients. That said, courts have ruled that at times the duty to a patient is superseded by the duty to warn or protect others.

Candles are lit to remember the victims of the Germanwings Airbus flight on Saturday in Digne-les-Bains, France. The tragedy involving an apparently mentally ill co-pilot is raising questions of whether mental health professionals have a duty to warn authorities if they think a patient is likely to be a threat to others. THOMAS LOHNES/GETTY IMAGES

How has this played out in the courts?

A pivotal case occurred in the 1970s and involved a California psychologist who was counselling a student at the University of California at Berkeley. In counselling, the student threatened to kill another student, Tatiana Tarasoff. The therapist took the threat seriously and alerted campus police. They briefly detained the student, but let him go. No one warned Tarasoff, and in October 1969 she was murdered. Her parents sued.

From this case came the understanding that health professionals not only had a duty to warn that a patient might be a threat to others, but that warning wasn't enough if it didn't protect the possible victim.

What have the courts said in Canada?

Here the rules are guided by a Supreme Court decision from 1999 in a case called Smith vs.

Jones. A psychiatrist, John Smith, did a psychiatric evaluation at the behest of the defence lawyers for James Jones, accused of aggravated sexual assault. During the session, Jones disclosed plans to kidnap, rape and kill prostitutes.

Smith applied to the courts for the right to disclose the confidential information. Lawyers for Jones attempted to block Smith. The case ended up before the Supreme Court of Canada, which ruled that doctor-patient confidentiality is not absolute and may have to be breached if there is a danger to the public.

How is that applied here?

It is spelled out in a policy paper from the Canadian Psychiatric Association entitled The Duty to Protect.

The association interprets the Supreme Court ruling to mean that doctors do have a duty to disclose information they've been told by patients if they believe those patients pose a danger. And it tells members to warn patients that there are limits to confidentiality.

The association notes the Supreme Court did not stipulate exactly how medical professionals should discharge their duty to protect, but says the steps could include detaining a patient believed to be dangerous, treating that patient or breaching confidentiality by informing the police or the intended target of the violence. THE CANADIAN PRESS

IS A SICK NOTE ENOUGH?

No, says Dr. Jeff Daskalakis, chief of the mood and anxiety division at the Toronto's Centre for Addiction and Mental Health. Daskalakis says if a doctor felt the pilot wasn't well enough to work, that doctor should have informed the airline.

"If you feel that there's a remote risk that this person has any kind of violent ideas and they're flying a plane, then I think it's essential ... to contact and notify the right authorities to make sure that both the person and the people that this person is responsible for are safe."

People aren't sold on self-driving cars

Although many can accept that autonomous vehicles could cut accidents caused by drunk driving or distractions and even increase productivity and leisure time, one third of U.S. adults say that they would never consider buying or leasing one.

Truly autonomous vehicles may well be some 20 years away from becoming an everyday reality, but the buzz around the technology has already reached deafening levels. To understand how this increasing media coverage is impacting consumer opinions, Harris Poll has surveyed a representative sample of 2,276 U.S. adults and the results are surprising.

Even though a number of active assist systems are already appearing on cars, including park and traffic jam assist features, there is no consensus on this breakthrough. Just under one in five feel that self-driving cars are "insanely cool" and 22 per cent would go as far as to say it's a technology they'd love to have, but 12 per cent say that the whole subject is just "confusing."

As for perceived benefits and drawbacks, the computing power needed to take over driving responsibilities is weighing heavy on some people's minds — 80 per cent think that computer 'glitches' are going to be an issue and 37 per cent are concerned about personal data breaches.

Of respondents in a survey feel autonomous vehicles are 'insanely cool'

A number of studies have highlighted how many accidents self-driving cars could prevent each year and a number of tech-focused companies in the industry, most notably Google and Tesla, have talked up how moving the human element from driving is the key to preserving life. AFP

While autonomous cars could cut down on incidents of drunk driving and increase leisure time, drivers still have their doubts about the technology. SHUTTERSTOCK

Ageless wonder pulls rug out from under Senators

NHL
Jagr's pair has Florida clawing at the heels of Ottawa

Jaromir Jagr had two goals and Dan Ellis made 25 saves Sunday night as the Florida Panthers defeated the Ottawa Senators 4-2. The win pulled the Panthers (35-26-15) to within a single point of Ottawa (37-26-12) for ninth in the Eastern Conference. The Senators are now three points behind the eight-place Boston Bruins. Ottawa has a game in hand. Jussi Jokinen and Dave Bolland also scored for Florida while Erik Karlsson and Jean-Gabriel Pageau found the back of the net for the Senators. Ottawa's Craig Anderson made 33 saves. Trailing 2-0 entering the third period, Karlsson got the Senators on the board with a power-play goal at 4:43. It was just the second time in the last 34 opportunities at home that Ottawa converted on the power play. Karlsson took a shot from the point that found its way through four bodies and past Ellis. After drawing Anderson out of the net with a fake shot, the 43-year-old Jagr scored his second goal of the game at 13:57 on a wraparound to give the Smooth sailing for 67's through two games Scoring goals is not a problem for the Ottawa 67's so far this post season, as the team has racked up 16 goals in just two games against the Niagara Ice Dogs. They will try to continue their winning ways Monday, as they travel to Niagara for Game 3 of the OHL playoffs. If the 67's stars keep rolling like they have, Ottawa should have no problem cruising through the series, as Dante Salituro and captain Travis Konecny have combined for an impressive 13 points through two games. Salituro leads all OHL players with four goals and three assists in the playoffs. Game 1 was a back-and-forth grudge match, with both teams trading goals until Ottawa put it away 8-5. Game 2 at TD Place Arena wasn't so balanced, as Konecny's four assists helped The 67's trounce the Ice Dogs 8-2. The 67's head to Niagara for Game 3 Monday and Game 5 Wednesday. Seventh seed advances to Final Four after OT triumph

Coach Tom Izzo and the Michigan State Spartans capped an improbable run to the Final Four with an overtime win.

Senior guard Travis Trice scored 17 points and the seventh-seeded Spartans clamped down on defence to pull out a 76-70 victory over fourth-seeded Louisville in a thrilling NCAA Tournament East Regional final Sunday.

The Spartans (28-11), who were nearly counted out of the tournament conversation in February, won for the 12th time in 15 games. It's a run that included them knocking off second-seeded Virginia last weekend and third-seeded Oklahoma in the regional semifinal on Friday.

Ferrari's Vettel ends Mercedes' streak

Fears that Mercedes would dominate the 2015 Formula One season were swept aside in a flash of Ferrari red on Sunday as a tearful Sebastian Vettel won the Malaysian Grand Prix and announced himself as a genuine title contender.

Most observers were gloomily predicting another one-sided season after Mercedes recorded a comfortable one-two finish in the season opener in Australia, but two weeks later the picture was very different as Ferrari capitalized on searing track temperatures and some rare Mercedes mistakes to take a drought-breaking victory.

Coming off eight straight wins and with Lewis Hamilton on pole, there was every reason to expect another Mercedes stroll. However, a track temperature of 61 C at the start of the race exposed a chink in Mercedes' armour, as their tires degraded more quickly than Vettel's.

The turning point of the race came on just lap four when the safety car emerged. Vettel, who had been trailing Hamilton up to that point, elected to stay out while both Mercedes cars pitted. Vettel was in control from then on. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RECIPE Mushroom and Spinach Miniature Lasagna Rolls

EAT LIGHT AT HOME

Rose Reisman
rosereisman.com

@rosereisman

Ready in

Prep time: 20 minutes
Bake time: 33 minutes

This is a great way to make individual servings of lasagna, not to mention a tasty vegetarian option.

Directions

1. Preheat the oven to 400 F.

2. Bring a large pot of water to a boil. Add the lasagna noodles and cook for about 8 minutes or until the noodles are just tender. Drain and rinse with cold water. Set aside.

3. Lightly coat a large, nonstick skillet with cooking spray, add the oil, onion, garlic and mushrooms and sauté for 8 minutes or just until the mushrooms are no longer wet. Add the spinach and allow the spinach to wilt, about 3 minutes. Remove the skillet from the heat and add the ricotta, mozzarella and Parmesan cheeses, mustard, salt and pepper.

4. Place the mixture in the bowl of a food processor and pulse on and off until it is uniformly chopped.

5. Pour 1 cup of the tomato sauce into a 9- x 13-inch casserole dish. Spread about 1/4 cup of the cheese mixture along the length of each sheet. Roll up each noodle and cut in half. Place in baking dish with the ruffled side of lasagna facing up. Pour the remaining 1/3 cup of the tomato sauce over and sprinkle with the grated mozzarella cheese. Cover with foil and bake for 20 minutes or just until hot.

Ingredients

- 8 lasagna noodles
- 2 tsp vegetable oil
- 1 1/2 cups finely chopped onion
- 2 tsp finely chopped garlic
- 3 cups chopped mushrooms
- 4 cups fresh baby spinach
- 3/4 cup light ricotta (5%)
- 2/3 cup shredded mozzarella cheese
- 1/3 cup grated Parmesan cheese
- 1/2 tsp Dijon mustard
- pinch of salt and pepper
- 1 1/3 cups tomato sauce, divided
- 3 Tbsp shredded mozzarella cheese

★ IT'S ALL IN THE STARS by Sally Brompton

Aries March 21 - April 20
You seem to be working harder than ever but not getting harder to show for it. Don't worry. The Sun in your sign means you are guaranteed some sort of return on the efforts you are making.

Taurus April 21 - May 21
You are trying to make sense of something that makes no sense at all, so it is no wonder you are getting frustrated. Some puzzles are best left unsolved.

Gemini May 22 - June 21
The consequences of something you did weeks and maybe even months ago will catch up with you over the next few days. Chances are it will be quite enjoyable.

Cancer June 22 - July 23
It isn't enough that you just feel confident, you must apply that confidence and get important things done. Both in your personal life and at work there are changes that need to be made.

Leo July 24 - Aug. 23
No one has the right to tell you what to believe or what to do and anyone who tries will feel the rough edge of your tongue. Better you go too far than let them think you are an easy touch.

Virgo Aug. 24 - Sept. 23
Nothing truly happens by chance and if you keep that thought in mind today you will be able to make sense of something that leaves others baffled.

Libra Sept. 24 - Oct. 23
Is there some overall goal you are working towards in life? If not, now is the time to decide who or what you should devote yourself to — besides yourself, of course!

Scorpio Oct. 24 - Nov. 22
It won't be long before you look back at something that is causing you grief and realize how unimportant it was. Get over it and give yourself a break.

Sagittarius Nov. 23 - Dec. 21
You can turn almost any situation to your advantage now but don't get carried away and take on someone who is obviously several leagues above you on the power ladder.

Capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 20

Work hard early in the day because the afternoon and evening will bring social opportunities you won't want to miss. Don't burden yourself with unnecessary deadlines.

Aquarius Jan. 21 - Feb. 19
If you don't tell the absolute truth about yourself today you will regret it later in the week when your evasive tactics are revealed for the world to see. Put everything in the public domain.

Pisces Feb. 20 - March 20
It does not matter that you have made some kind of mistake, what matters is that you learn from it. Don't be too stubborn to admit that you got it wrong, it's no big deal. You are human like everyone else.
